

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

BYAMBAJAV DALAIBUYAN is Research Fellow at the University of Queensland in Australia and co-Founder of the Mongolian Institute for Innovative Policies. His research interests include civil society participation, social movements, and social and political aspects of extractive industries.

STEPHAN DUDECK is Research Fellow in Arctic Studies at the Institute of Cultural Research of the University of Tartu. He is an anthropologist focusing on collaborative research with Indigenous communities in Western Siberia. He has been working in the Russian North since the early 1990s and has also field experience in post-Soviet Central Asia.

GAIL FONDAHL is Professor emerita of Geography at the University of Northern British Columbia, Canada. Her research focuses on Indigenous rights in the Russian north, including the changing spaces that legal reforms permit, and their materialization as laws are invoked, interpreted and implemented in place.

KAORI HORIUCHI holds a Research Fellowship for Young Scientists of the Japan Society for the Promotion of Science. She is a historian specializing in the Qing era Mongols.

SERGEI A. KAN is a professor at Dartmouth College in Hanover NH, USA. His research and writings explore the social system and rituals of the Tlingit people of southeast Alaska, the role of the Russian Orthodox Church in Alaska, and the history of American and Russian anthropology, particularly Franz Boas, Leo Shternberg, and their students.

ASYA KARASEVA is a Junior Research Fellow in Ethnology at the Arctic Research Centre, University of Tartu. Her broad research interests include modern governance and social dynamics in the Russian Arctic.

ERICH KASTEN is ethnologist from Berlin who has done research with the First Nations in the Canadian Pacific Northwest and in Northeastern Siberia. He is the director of the Foundation for Siberian Cultures (Kulturstiftung Sibirien) in Fürstenberg/Havel, Germany.

IGOR KRUPNIK is curator of Arctic and Northern ethnological collections at the National Museum of Natural History, Smithsonian Institution in Washington DC, USA. He publishes extensively on Indigenous adaptations to social and environmental change, history of research in the polar regions, and the value of museum, archival, and photographic collections to northern Indigenous people.

JULIA LAJUS is currently a visiting researcher at the University of Helsinki; in 2023, she was a Visiting Professor at Columbia University in New York, where she taught the history of the Arctic and the history of climate sciences.

NATALIA NAUMOVA is an independent researcher and anthropologist. Her research focus is at the intersection of political anthropology, anthropology of bureaucracy and arctic anthropology, addressing issues of governance and its instrumental effects.

NICHOLAS J. PARLATO is a graduate research assistant at the Center for Arctic Policy Studies of the International Arctic Research Center in Fairbanks, Alaska. His research concerns Arctic environmental governance, legal-institutional networks, and planetary social thought in the Anthropocene.

IGOR PASTERNAK teaches in the Art and Ethnobotany programs at the University of Alaska Fairbanks. As a practicing artist who conducts ethnographic research, he investigates everyday living aesthetics to create opportunities for cross-disciplinary and cross-cultural collaboration and public engagement. His study regions include Chukotka, Alaska, and Ukraine.

PAVEL SULYANDZIGA (PhD in Economics) is an Udege Indigenous leader and political activist born in Russia's Pacific region and a member of the UN Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations. He serves as Chairperson of the Board of the International Development Fund of Indigenous Peoples in Russia (BATANI) and was the Vice-President of RAIPON (Russian Association of Indigenous Peoples of the North, Siberia, and the Far East, 2001–2010) and a member of the United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (2005–2010). He is currently affiliated with the University of Maine School of Law in Portland, USA.

HIROKI TAKAKURA is Professor of the Center for Northeast Asian Studies at Tohoku University. He works on human-animal relations, ethnohistory and disaster resilience in Siberia and Northeast Asia.

OLEKSANDR VASIUKOV is an independent researcher and anthropologist. His research interests include the anthropology of ethnicity and sociolinguistics, Central European ethnic and linguistic minorities.

SVETA YAMIN-PASTERNAK teaches in the Anthropology and Ethnobotany programs at the University of Alaska Fairbanks. She practices broad-based ethnography, focusing on the interactions of foodways, landscape, and built environment. Her study regions include Chukotka, Alaska, and Ukraine.

EDUARD V. ZDOR is Research Technician at the University of Alaska Museum of the North. The main focus of his research is the Indigenous cultures of the Bering Strait region.

MARK ZDOR was a student at St. Petersburg University and is currently studying German at Grone Schule. His research interests include ethnography of Indigenous peoples of the Russian Arctic and anthropology of socio-political processes of indigenous peoples in Russia.